Retirement System Investment Commission

Poor executive and senior leadership with no management experience, poor asset allocation with decision makers who contributed to underperformance still employed, poor compensation policies that only affect half of the agency, poor human resources function that is not independent or objective and overcompensated, executives received a compensation increase in a year with poor performance following a 30-40% total compensation pay cut to half of staffers who met predefined performance targets, rampant nepotism with executive assistants and human resources making the same if not more than essential investment and operational professionals.
