What is a Community Health Center?

Community Health Centers (CHCs)—also known as Federally Qualified Health Centers (FQHCs)—are non-profit, community-based organizations that deliver high-quality, affordable health care to people who face barriers such as cost, distance, language, or social background. These centers are located in medically marginalized areas where access to care is limited. CHCs offer comprehensive services, including primary care, preventive services, and often on-site dental, pharmacy, and behavioral health care. In South Carolina alone, they provide care to more than 446,000 residents, regardless of insurance status or ability to pay. By offering cost-effective care and reducing unnecessary emergency room visits, CHCs not only improve health outcomes—they also help save taxpayer dollars.

Community Health Centers:

- are located in medically marginalized areas with elevated poverty, higher than average infant mortality, and a physician shortage;
- are governed by a community board composed of 51% or more of CHC patients who represent the population served;
- are open to all residents, regardless of health insurance status or inability to pay;
- provide comprehensive primary and other health care services, including transportation, translation, and case management;
- tailor services to fit the specific needs and priorities of their communities and provide services in a linguistically and socially appropriate manner; and
- are cost effective, reducing costly emergency, hospital and specialty care, and save the health care system $334.8 million in Medicaid spending.
