AGENCY'S DISCUSSION AND ANALYSIS

Since 1801, the University of South Carolina Columbia has shared the goals, triumphs, and hardships of its state. Within the very name of our university rests its most solemn obligation: the obligation to the people of South Carolina. That includes not just admitting more South Carolinians but ensuring that they are academically prepared for higher education, that they can enter the University of South Carolina system at a place and time that is most convenient and affordable for them, that they can move within our system without barriers or challenges and that their academic training aligns with available job opportunities within our state and in an increasingly competitive global marketplace.

As the flagship institution of South Carolina's university system, USC has evolved into a network of eight distinct campuses: the main campus in Columbia, three regional comprehensive campuses (Aiken, Beaufort, and Upstate), and four regional two-year campuses (Lancaster, Salkehatchie, Sumter, and Union). In fall 2025, total headcount enrollment topped 58,000 students across all campuses. Columbia campus enrollment exceeded 40,000 students for the first time in the institution's history. Of the 7,818 first-time freshmen enrolled at USC Columbia for the fall 2025 semester, 4,121 (52%) are South Carolina residents – more South Carolinians than ever enrolled before. Students come from each of the state's 46 counties, as well as 47 U.S. states and 28 countries from across the world. 63% percent are female, 27% are Historically Underrepresented Minorities (URM), 23.3% are Pell-eligible, and 20.7% are First Generation. Overall, on the Columbia campus, students are 60% female, 68% White, 11.4% Black or African American, and 6.8% Hispanic. USC is not just growing; it is setting new records. In addition to enrollment gains, USC reached a new high in sponsored research awards in 2025— $325 million, an increase of 4.5% over the previous record. World-class USC researchers are addressing some of the most pressing issues through innovation, bolstering research areas such as cancer, Alzheimer's and stroke, and focusing on South Carolina's marine health. The university is a major center for global research, drawing students from around the world while also making higher education more accessible for South Carolinians.

The University of South Carolina Columbia is a globally recognized, high-impact research university dedicated to providing a superior student experience. South Carolina, one of the fastest-growing flagship universities in the nation, offers abundant opportunities for students to succeed, from cutting-edge research initiatives to highly personal student services, from top-ranked academic programs to top-ranked athletics teams.

The academic community comprises over 2,000 full-time faculty and 3,000 staff members who support over 350 degree programs across 16 colleges and schools. At USC Columbia, these faculty and staff are dedicated to not just creating a superior academic experience for students, but also to acting as partners in the Columbia community and South Carolina as a whole. University activity – the research, cultural events, teaching, tourism and more that occurs on and around campus -- is a key contributor to South Carolina's long-term economic and employment growth. More than simply providing jobs, the university's faculty, staff, students and alumni are forces equipped to drive generations of opportunity. The university has a $7.4 billion annual impact on the state's economy and supports 61,700 jobs — 1 out of every 39 — statewide. In the Columbia metro region, the university supports 1 in 10 jobs, with a total annual economic impact of $4.2 billion. Moreover, two out of three alumni living in SC reside outside of the Columbia metro region, contributing to local economies across the state.

Our leadership stands by and values the priorities included in the 2020 strategic plan and will continue to further our important work in those areas. Each priority reflects our foundational values of Access and Transparency, Inclusive Excellence, and Service and Integrity, which are also at the core of our Carolinian Creed.

Affordability and Access

If there is one constant for colleges and universities, it is that the higher education landscape is always changing. The primary responsibility of any university is serving its students. In a world that is ever-changing, the University of South Carolina Columbia must continue to focus on the strategic horizon and be diligent both today and as the institution plans for the future. To be the flagship university of South Carolina, the institution must serve the people of this state by evaluating this shifting landscape and making the necessary adjustments that produce leaders of character to meet the educational, professional, economic and corporate needs of this great state.

The University of South Carolina introduced two major initiatives aimed at expanding access for South Carolina students. Both were launched with the incoming freshman class of Fall 2024.
The first is a new admissions policy that guarantees acceptance to USC for South Carolina students who graduate in the top 10 percent of their high school class. Complementing this is the USC Commitment Grant, which ensures that tuition and academic fees are fully covered for top 10 percent students whose family income is below $80,000. In the first year of implementation, these initiatives led to an increase in the number of top-performing South Carolina freshmen, including a notable rise in students from rural counties. These efforts reflect USC's ongoing commitment to making higher education more accessible and affordable for all South Carolinians.

At the same time, the university continues its efforts to reduce the financial burden of a college education for in-state students. Thanks to the most substantial funding support in recent memory from the South Carolina General Assembly, the institution has been able to maintain in-state tuition at the same level for the sixth consecutive year. When adjusted for inflation, this effectively amounts to a 25 percent reduction in the real cost of tuition over that period, demonstrating the university's strong commitment to affordability and access for South Carolina families.

First Generation

First-generation students represent more than 20% of USC's undergraduate population, and the university is committed to ensuring they have access to the resources, relationships and opportunities needed to thrive from enrollment through graduation.

The First-Generation Center, housed in Maxcy College, serves as USC's central hub for first-generation student support. The center provides academic, social and personal support; mentoring opportunities; faculty and staff engagement; and a First-Generation Living and Learning Community for incoming students. The center brings together campus partners to reduce barriers, strengthen belonging and support student persistence and graduation. USC's first-generation efforts have been nationally recognized through the FirstGen Forward Network Champion designation.

Faculty and staff play a critical role in first-generation student success at USC. Through mentorship, visibility and advocacy, faculty and staff help students navigate university culture and connect to resources. USC encourages faculty and staff who identify as first-generation college graduates to share their experiences and serve as mentors for students.

USC's comprehensive approach to first-generation student success reflects a university-wide commitment to access, belonging and graduation. Through coordinated leadership, evidence-based practices and cross-campus collaboration, the University of South Carolina continues to strengthen pathways for first-generation students and their families.

Community Engagement

The University of South Carolina has earned 2026 Carnegie Classification for Community Engagement, an honor recognizing an institution's commitment to community engagement. USC is one of less than 100 public institutions nationwide to have a Carnegie Classification for both Community Engagement and as an R1 research institution. The classification for community engagement will be valid through 2032.

USC has over 470 courses designated as service learning or community engaged courses with almost 36 percent of faculty teaching at least one course with designations specific to community engagement and/or service learning. Almost one of four courses at USC provides purposeful engagement beyond the classroom for students to apply course concepts to real world settings.

USC has a variety of key community relationships that include hosting Service Saturdays throughout the year where students go into the community and volunteer with various community partners.

Cocky's Reading Express is a literary outreach initiative traveling to Title I schools in the state to read to children and provide book giveaways while USC's colleges of social work, nursing and pharmacy partnered to combat health worker burnout through online training sessions.

Other key community initiatives include USC's rural health initiatives like the Brain Health Network, social service programs like the CommUnity Shop and partnerships with Habitat for Humanity.
USC also serves as a polling place during elections and saw over 12,000 Richland County voters cast their ballots on campus during the 2024 elections. Thanks in part to voting workshops, USC helped almost 1,000 students register to vote in the three months leading up to the 2024 elections.

The university recently rejoined the Campus Compact network, the largest and oldest coalition of higher education institutions dedicated to civic and community engagement.

World-class Faculty and Staff

The University of South Carolina had 148 faculty members across 11 different colleges and schools make the 2025 list of the world's top-cited researchers in their field. That is the highest among in-state universities — with the next best registering just over 100 faculty — and in the top half among SEC institutions. USC's largest college, the McCausland College of Arts and Sciences, had the most faculty represented with 61, followed by the Arnold School of Public Health (25), the School of Medicine Columbia (15), the Darla Moore School of Business (13) and the Molinaroli College of Engineering and Computing (11).
Other areas represented include: College of Pharmacy (6); Darla Moore School of Business (5); School of Medicine Greenville (5); College of Nursing (2); College of Hospitality, Retail and Sports Management (3); College of Education (2) and the School of Music (1).

The University of South Carolina has been named one of America's Best-In-State Employers for 2025 by Forbes. This honor affirms USC's continued commitment to providing top-notch resources and experiences for the over 10,000 faculty and staff across the USC system.

Outstanding Research

The University of South Carolina set a third-straight record by attracting $323 million in sponsored awards during the fiscal year ending June 30, continuing momentum in innovation over a wide range of fields from high-tech engineering to critical health sciences.

Despite a rapidly shifting federal funding landscape, USC's sponsored awards — which include research grants, service awards and training awards — rose by 4.5 percent over the same period a year earlier, thanks to researchers aggressively pursuing opportunities across an array of funding agencies.

USC's sponsored awards have increased by 36 percent since 2021-22. The boost in awards gives South Carolina's flagship university more opportunities to address the challenges facing the Palmetto State. Over the past four years, highly competitive federal funding has risen by 39 percent to $241 million. State-sponsored funding reached $51 million, up 27 percent over the past four years.

Many of USC's colleges increased their sponsored awards over the past year. Awards to the College of Social Work and the School of Medicine Columbia increased by more than 45 percent. The Molinaroli College of Engineering and Computing led all USC colleges in receiving sponsored awards with a record $77 million, an increase of 12 percent from a year ago. The College of Education's awards rose by 22 percent to $28.2 million over the previous year, while the College of Nursing's awards increased by 19 percent to $10.2 million.

USC researchers received major support from federal health and science agencies as well as the Pentagon:

- $72.2 million from the National Institutes of Health to fund a wide variety of health research including studies on conditions that affect South Carolinians, such as neurodevelopmental and learning disorders, hypertension, obesity and stroke.
- $45.5 million from the Department of Defense to create digital tools that enable unmanned marine vessels to work together autonomously and support other national security projects.
- $24.4 million from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to study maternal health and methods for increasing physical activity among older South Carolinians as well as research areas.
- $22.4 million from the National Science Foundation to create a mobile research laboratory to study brain development in underserved areas of the state, support advanced materials research and manufacturing, and work on other projects.
- $17.1 million from the U.S. Department of Commerce to support the development of grid-scale battery technology and extreme semiconductor chips.
- $16.4 million from the U.S. Department of Education to help South Carolina middle- and high-schoolers prepare to succeed in college, support international business education and other research.

USC's dedication to advancing research and discovery is helping it become even more competitive in winning sponsored awards. At the beginning of 2025, USC opened the Carolina Grants and Innovation Hub, a one-stop shop that helps faculty researchers develop top-quality proposals with mentoring, services and training. USC credits the hub for a 10 percent boost in awards from the NIH's prestigious R01 grant program.

USC continues to rank among the country's top research institutions by being recognized by the Carnegie Foundation with its top classification — R1 university with "very high spending and doctorate production."

Research Institutes

The University of South Carolina will invest $10 million over the next four years in five new interdisciplinary research institutes that will address some of the Palmetto State's biggest challenges, including health, education and water quality.

Each of the new research institutes will receive $500,000 per year over four years from USC's Research Institutes Funding Program. The institutes will be led by multidisciplinary teams of research faculty focusing on innovative solutions to problems in South Carolina and beyond. Along with new breakthroughs, the institutes have the potential to bring future funding and prosperity to the state in the form of major federal grants and commercialization opportunities.

- The USC Institute for Rural Education and Development will seek better ways to teach math, science and engineering (STEM) to rural students across the state. Researchers will focus on early grades with an emphasis on developing a holistic approach to teaching STEM.

- The USC Institute for Extreme Semiconductor Chips will work to develop more powerful and efficient electronic and optical microchips which can be used for the electric grid, electric vehicles, aircraft and advanced health care applications. The development of homegrown computer chips also has been identified as an important national security priority.

- The USC Institute for Infections Disease Translation Research will study emerging diseases that have the potential to develop into major public health threats, especially those spread by insects and those transferred from mother to child.

- The USC Institute for Clean Water will explore novel ways to monitor water quality to ensure safe drinking water and to protect South Carolina's waterways for use by humans and wildlife alike.

- The USC Institute for Cardiovascular Disease Research will study the ways in which chronic stress leads to a host of physical ailments, including heart and kidney disease. The research could eventually lead to the development of new treatments for heart disease.

Risk Assessment and Mitigation Strategies

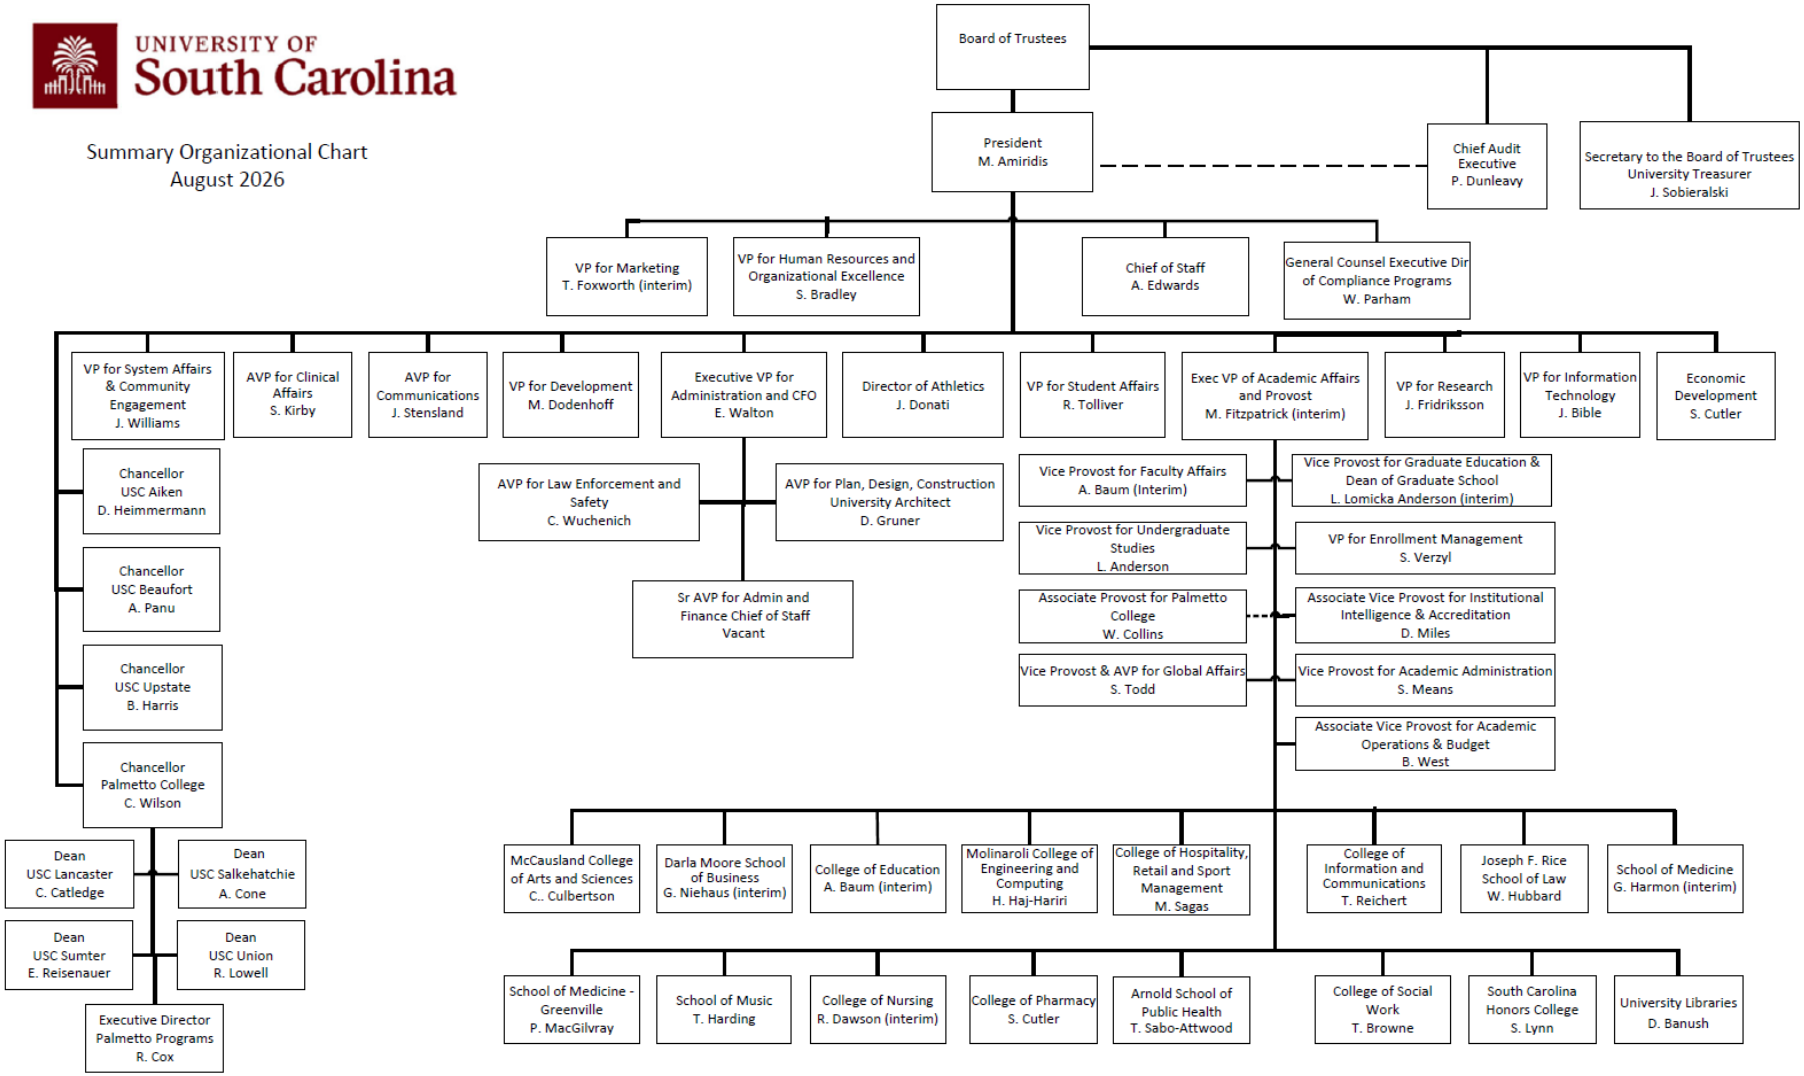

The University has implemented a comprehensive Enterprise Risk Management (ERM) program which incorporates the fundamentals of risk identification, risk assessment, risk treatment, risk monitoring and review.The University has set up this process using the guidance of International Standards Organization (ISO) 31000-2018 "Risk Management - Principals and Guidelines". ISO provides the principles, framework and process for managing any form of risk in a systematic, transparent and credible manner. The ERM program works within an established University ERM committee structure to provide a detailed picture of high priority risk areasas identified by upper management. Identified high priority risk areas include: governance, legislative relations, economic decline, emergency planning, disaster recovery, business continuity, laboratory safety, student safety, crime prevention, title IX compliance, data security and privacy, institutional data reporting, capital project management/deferred maintenance, enrollment management, personnel recruiting and retention/succession planning, research compliance, and IT system implementation. As necessary, the University monitors and tracks these high priority risk areas and implements actions plans to effectively control these risks.
