This week, the Senate adopted S. 672, known as the Sine Die Resolution. If it is adopted by the House, all bills not enrolled for ratification or assigned to a conference committee by 5 p.m. this Thursday will hold in place until next January. The Senate also reconvenes Monday at 1 p.m. to begin finalizing legislation before adjournment.

A conference committee on the state budget bill, H. 3720, and the capital reserve fund bill, H. 3721, will be meeting to consider the differences in House and Senate versions.

Discussions of the state budget will dominate much of the work of the General Assembly as the end of session approaches. Work on the state budget coincides with plans to reach a consensus and approve H. 3516, commonly called the roads bill.

Look ahead to next week and beyond:

The work of the conference committee on the budget will be complicated by the House's strategy of bobtailing their roads bill as a permanent Part II in the budget - a practice eliminated by the Senate more than 15 years ago. As a result, Senator Leatherman introduced S. 671, a continuing resolution that would keep South Carolina operating if a budget agreement is not reached by July 1.

Sine Die adjournment is Thursday, May 11. The resolution for Sine Die also sets up the General Assembly's schedule to return on Tuesday, May 23 for a final wrap up of the year.
